ART THAT PACKS A PUNCH

By Graham Kahn

Sculptor John Taylor created a large, red lettered sign that he placed on a wall, next to a large, red lettered sign. The sign reads "Under the Influence: The Comics!" at the Edith N. Lehman College Art Gallery. The sign is illuminated by a bright light, and the letters are cast in bold, red type. The sign is attached to a wall, and the letters are made of metal, giving them a polished, shiny appearance.

"Under the Influence: The Comics!" is an exhibition that explores the influence of comic books on contemporary art. The exhibition features works by artists who have been inspired by the world of comics, including illustrations, paintings, and sculptures. The exhibition runs from March 22nd to May 3rd.

The works on display include a large, red sculpture of a superhero, a painting of a comic book cover, and a series of photographs depicting characters from popular comic books. The exhibition also features a video installation that explores the history of comic books and their influence on popular culture.

The exhibition is open to the public, and visitors are encouraged to explore the different ways in which comic books have influenced contemporary art. The exhibition is sponsored by the Edith N. Lehman College Art Gallery, and is free to the public.
