Twill I Will, 2020

“In keeping with the hegemonic government currently in place, I painted a twill pattern. Using repetition to learn and embody the pattern automatically, I allowed the splitting of brush hairs and variation in ink load to undermine its regularity, finding new rhythms and pathways in the variation. The pattern of vertical and horizontal axis, freed from material obligation of any kind but window perforated vinyl, tints the conservative aesthetic bright pink. Beneath every exterior is an alternative interior.” -Elisabeth Condon-
